This publication is the first of a series that provides space to contend with fundamental professional and academic concerns in architecture. The essays included in this issue explore what it means to belong to land, to claim it, to be landed, or to maintain land through stewardship and responsibility. The authors span scales and interpretations from the earthbound (Silvana Taher), to the mythical (Charlotte Birrell), the legal (Georgia Hablützel) and the infrastructural (Tadeas Riha).
